

Requirements and User Story Backlog

As part of any software project, shareholders and clients have specific requirements for their system. This particular project is centered around the development of a condo management system with a list of main features, as well as some additional features that may be explored in the future. As part of the process of dissecting the project requirements and splitting tasks into manageable and understandable goals, user stories are created. This document serves as a backlog of all user stories and tracks their progress throughout our sprints.

The user stories will take the form of cards using this template:

ID	Title			Open/Closed Status
As I want So that	<user> <what> <value>
MoSCoW	Business Value	Risk	Effort

The Open/Closed status will also be highlighted with one of the three following colors with their associated meanings:

- Green: New user story
- Yellow: Updated ongoing user story
- Blue: Ongoing user story unchanged from last sprint
- Red: Closed/completed user story

Once acceptance tests pass for the user story, the card's title is crossed out.

Our user stories can primarily be found in the issues tab of our github, but this document will always be updated as sprints progress, and will contain more detailed stories. User story IDs follow IDs automatically generated on github, and as such some of the numbering might be off due to other non user story issues also being part of the numbering system such as pull requests.
